Not illustrated. 1797 Excerpt: ...well we saw what must have been Out fate, When harmony with beauty joint, of late, Threatend the ruins of our sinhing state; Till you, from whom our being we receive, In pity bid your own creation live; With moving sounds you hindly drew the fair, Andfdk, once more, that shining circle here: The lyre you bring is half Apollos praise; Be ours the tash to win and wear his bays. Thin houses were before so frequent to us, We wanted not a project to undo us; We seldom saw your honours, but by chance, 4s some folks meet their friends of Spain and France. Twos verse decayd, or politics improvd, That had estrangd you thus from what you lovd. Time was, when busy faces were a jest, When wit and pleasure were in most request; When cheerful theatres with crowds were graed j But those good days of poetry are past; Now sour reformers in an empty pit, With table-books, as at a letlurc, sit, To tahe notes, and give evidence gainst wit. Those who were once our friends, employd elsewhere, Arc busy now in settling peace and war; With cartful brows at Toms and Wills they meet, And ash who did elcBions lose or get Our friend has lost it--Faith Im sorryfort, Hes a good man, and neer was for the court; He to no government will sue for grace, By want of merit safe against a place, By spite a patriot made, and sworn t oppose All who are uppermost, as Englands foes: Let Whig or Tory, any side prevail, Still tis his constant privilege to rail. Another, that the tax and war may cease, Talks of the duhe ofAnjous right and peace, And, from Spains wise example, is for tahing A vice-roy of the mighty monarchs mahing; Who should all rights and liberties maintain, And English laws by learnd dragoons explain.
